Comments The most important and appropriate public policy is one that focuses on education that provides our children with the knowledge and skills to make informed decisions about their health and relationships. It should include a curriculum that emphasizes the importance of reproductive health, consent, and safe practices, equipping young people with essential information. If we can turn our focus back to these foundational elements, I believe we can ensure young adults understand all the varied dimensions of their sexuality. I believe this approach will foster responsible behavior, respect for oneself and other and prepare young adults for healthy relationships in adulthood, regardless of their individual sexual orientation.
